Sights	The Buhui Dam was built between 1884-1888 and was the first artificial reservoir in Romania located on limestone. The dam is a "weight dam with a body made of clayey soil". The gross volume of water in the reservoir is 505,450 cubic meters and the maximum surface area of the reservoir is 10.07 hectares. The Buhui Valley, with stretches of dry riverbeds, is entirely forested with predominantly coniferous species. The entrance to the Buhui Cave through the Certej Arch is a vault in a limestone wall through which water flows, spanning over 6 km in length. The entrance through the sinkhole of the Buhui Cave represents a steep karstic depression where, at the bottom, there is another entrance to the cave that intercepts the course of water flowing through the gallery. The Ovens Saddle is the highest point in the Buhui Valley, which divides the karstic valley and represents a crossroads of paths. The forest in the Bears Ridge is a forest dominated by conifers with large trees. Limestone fields formed from semi-buried white limestone with rounded edges occupy large areas in the forest throughout the region. Doline of various sizes and shapes, typical for the Anina karst area, are arranged parallel to the road, forming depression areas.
